

PEGGY HOPKINS JOYCE LAYS BARE HER STORY

(By United Press)

Paris, May 3.—“I liked to pull the strings. I liked to play with all of them. Now I am through with them.”

It was midnight in Peggy Hopkins Joyce's boudoir. The famous vamp of modern times and for whose love two men are said to have killed themselves, who has four times married and as many times divorced, and who has run through fortunes, laid bare her soul.

She wept because she couldn't tell the secret of her fataf fascination. “I liked their admiration,” Peggy cried, “it was life to me,” Lavishly gowned in a blue negligee, propped up in bed the former show girl, divorced wife of J. Stanley Joyce, drank beer and brandy, “the doctors orders to strengthen my nerves,” and smoked incessantly as she talked of her conquest of men and their many tragic endings.

“I don't know why men ran after me,” the girl, who has had the wealthiest and most influential men at her feet, declared. “Never, no never, did I deliberately try to lure them into my net. I never meant to ruin their lives.”

The latest of Peggy's victims is young William Errazuriz, Chilean youth, who shot himself in the rooms next to her suite on Sunday, because according to Peggy, she refused to marry him. The blow has changed her life. The millionaire siren declared, “I have learned that I loved Billy, and now it is too late. I loved him, but I layed with him just as I did with a good many others. Why did I do it?”, she cried.
